POETRY.

Are few, but deep and solemn, and they break Fresh from the fount of feeling.—Percival.

IT IS NOT ALWAYS MAY.

BY H. W. LONGFELLOW.
This sun is bright, the air is clear,
The daring swallows soar and sing,
And from the stately elms I hear The blue-bird, prophesying the Spring.
So blue yon winding river flows, It seems an outlet from the sky, Where, waiting till the west wind blows,
The freighted clouds at anchor lie.

All things are new—the buds, the leaves, That gild the elm trees nodding crest,
And e'en the nest beneath the eaves—There are no bids in last year's nest.
All things rejoice in youth and love,
The fulness of their first delight;
And learn from the soft heavens above The melting tenderness of night.

Maiden! thou read'st this simple rhyme, Enjoy thy youth—it will not stay; Enjoy the fragrance of thy prime,
For oh! it is not always May!

Enjoy the spring of love and youth,
To some good angel leave the rest;
For time will teach thee soon the truth,
There are no birds in last year's nest!

CHOICE READING.

"If you enlighten the people, do not forget that this is but half the work. Let them be made virtuous and religious, or you leave them more exposed to danger than they were before."

EXTRACT FROM P. S. WHITE'S ORATION.

Delivered at the Grand National Jubilee of the Sons of Temperance, in New York, on the 9th ult.

Concluded.

Why should the Roman Priesthood refuse burial in a consecrated ground to a member of any secret Order, when the con-fessional is so famous for the reason of the objection? Such criticisms are farcical.— Secrecy pervades the Universe, it veils the person of the Creator, it is indelibly written upon the wonderful mechanism of his creatures. Who but God can understand the hidden emotions of the human heart? And who, possessing that heart, will reveal all its secrets? Neither angel, nor man, nor devil, can unlock its mystic chambers and expose its cherished contents. Would you restrain the pious feeling that would steal from the social Babel, to wrap itself in its sacred musings? Would you put out the fire of the spirit that exhales the incense of the contrite heart, as it rises silently and secretly from an antipathy to earth to a kindred sympathy of Heaven? Would you invade the sanctity of the private circle and rudely parade before a censorious public, the wounded pride, disappointed hopes, misplaced affection, and all the charities of wedded love? Then, place a guard round every dwelling—a sentinel in every chamber—establish a system of universal espionage—declare an open war with Nature —and tear from the Throne the sublime veil that envelopes Nature's God.

It is astonishing how prone we are to overlook in ourselves, what we condemn in others. The merchant, while censuring the Order, seems to forget his use of private marks and secret signs; the Cardinal his conclave; the Judge his secret interchange of opinion in Banc. Washington's army had its outside sentinels, passwords, signs, and countersigns; its formalities of initiating and drilling its members; its ex-actions concerning age and constitutional disabilities; its private rules and regulations.— Its sick were provided for, its disabled were pensioned. The pledge which called it into existence will long be remembered. It struck for Liberty, and under God and Washington, secured it.

Our little disciplined cold water army is not unlike it; our secrecy is to guard against imposition in the bestowment of benefits, our aim is freedom from worse than Colonial vassalage—may God in his infinite mercy grant us like success.

It is farther alleged that the tendency of secrecy is injurious. To this we reply, that experience is to be the test. So far, the ## Order in question has proved the contrary.

"The tree is known by the fruit," and on all sides of us, our fruit may be seen in chustering profusion, and healthful exuberance —in the reunion of severed family ties—in winning our fellow men from the poisonous atmosphere of those worse than Upas plants —the grog shops; in rescuing children from ignorance and vice; in drying up the most fruitful source of woman's affliction. Such fruit is not gathered from thistle nor thorns.
If the objection be tenable, it is equally applicable to all the institutions to which we have alluded. These manifestoes are again proving too much for the objectors. The gun,

"Whether aimed at duck or plover, Shoots wide and kicks its owner over."

As to the objection sometimes made to our collars, badges, &c., we have only to reply that, as creatures of sense, we are influenced, in some degree, by external appearance. Some adopt a peculiar mode of dress to distinguish them as the founders of a new doctrine—some to be distinguished from the common mass, and some in conformity with supposed biblical authority.
The Sons of Temperance have adopted theirs to symbolize the three cardinal principles on which the institution is based, and believe they are not censurable for bearing on their bosoms the representation of the Love, Purity, and Fidelity which should exist within. The stars and stripes at the mast head of his ship make the sailor not the less brave—nor does the straight-breasted coat make the Quaker less moral. The ample sleeve of the Bishop, the surplice of his presbyter, the long robe of the barrister, the nodding plume or glittering epaulette of the soldier, the magnificent regalia of Aaron, the visible sacrifices of Moses and Solomon, and the white linen ephod of the ancient priesthood, did not deteriorate the merits of the wearers. On the contrary, we have good reason to believe that the effect was beneficial from the fact that God prescribed a mode of dress for his ministering servants in the tabernacle and temple.

If the success of our Order among the intelligent and the good be any proof of its merit, it holds the highest place among the moral movements of the age. Not yet four years in existence, it numbers near fifty thousand members. Six hundred Divisions have already been chartered, and twenty-three States of our glorious Union are giving brilliant evidences of their healthful away.
The radiant star has peered above the dark cloud of objections that dimmed its early lustre, and is now dispensing its refulgent beams from Maine to Florida, and from the Atlantic seaboard to the Western confines of the Republic. The indivisible triangles emblazoned with symbolic colors, like a sign of promise in the moral heaven, betokens a covenant that the fiery billows are fast assuaging. The dove has found a resting place, and heralds the tidings of relief.
The Sons and Daughters are separating the wheat from the tares. The patriarchs have gone forth to husband the earth. Conductors are pointing the way. The flowers send forth their accepted fragrance. The moral earth begins to smile, and Heaven moves with a kindred sympathy."
